He took her hand and kissed it as they sat side by side. "You're not," Irian said. She thought him between thirty and forty, though it was hard to tell. Besides myself, there was no one there, though the traffic of black cars was heavier. I did not. He laid his hands on the seam of earth, but there was no power in them. Again there was silence between them. The leaves of the willows stirred. No. There had been a thunderclap, a while ago. This was not thunder. He had had this queer feeling and had not recognized it, back then, before the earthquake that had sunk a half mile of the coast at Essary and swamped the wharfs at Gont Port. The wind had come up again. They were both shivering, their teeth chattering. They stood face to face in the black lane, hardly able to see where the other was. Dragonfly put out her groping hand and met the witch's hand. They put their arms round each other in a fierce, long embrace. Then they hurried on, the witch to her hut near the village, the heiress of Iria up the hill to her ruinous house, where all the dogs, who had let her go without much fuss, received her back with a clamour and racket of barking that woke everybody for a half-mile round except the Master, sodden drunk by his cold hearth. They cursed and sneered, but believed him. He had no idea if what he said was true. It had seemed. there, not many of them. They were not buying or selling. There were no booths or stalls set up. "Whatever for?". She did not speak. I went up to her, bent over the chair, took hold of her by her cold arms, her and bring them back to Roke when he returned. So they set off northeast across the Inmost Sea. He had half-consciously dreaded that Diamond would triumph over him, asserting his power right away -- that mysterious, dangerous, incalculable power against which Golden's wealth and mastery and dignity shrank to impotence. He sat up.

The dark sea was so quiet that the stars were reflected here and there on the sleek lee side of the long swells. Oared galleys seldom went out of sight of land and seldom rowed through the night, laying to in any bay or harbor; but there was no moorage on this crossing, and since the weather was settled so mild, they had put up the mast and big square sail. The ship drifted softly forward, her slave oarsmen sleeping on their benches, the free men of her crew all asleep but the helmsman and the lookout, and the lookout was dozing. The water whispered on her sides, her timbers creaked a little, a slaves chain rattled, rattled again..Things came round if you could wait for them, she thought. "I'll set em out for you," she said.
