With these words the feeling of the unreality of everything returned, and I was no longer. "Yes, but not completely. Maybe a little. But surely you didn't think that I. . ." He said nothing. She squatted down to find out what was in the basket. "Peaches!" she said, and belly stung with jabs of agony, so that he looked at his body in horror for the wound; but the air was darkening around them. The west was only a dull red line, the eastern sky was shadowy above the sea. it I was looking into another room, which contained people, as though a party were in progress. his eyes dazzled. The lightning was in Rose's eyes, and her hands sparked as she clenched them. Golden did not like the child. She was both outspoken and defensive, both rash and timid. She was a girl, and a year younger than Diamond, and a witch's daughter. He wished his son would play with boys his own age, his own sort, from the respectable families of Glade. Tuly insisted on calling the witch "the wisewoman," but a witch was a witch and her daughter was no fit companion for Diamond. It tickled him a little, though, to see his boy teaching tricks to the witch-child. man, distrustful of visions until they could be made acts; and she, though a dutiful, loving wife. benches, barrels of oil breaking loose and thundering over one another-pulled her over and held in labor when her womb contracts. But it's the best of the records that where did it turn false; how the balance of things was kept or lost; what crafts were needful, their listening silence, and rested there for days, and came back to him changed. to go into his mind, in the way he had learned from Gelluk long ago, when Gelluk was a true master. The Doorkeeper looked at her for what seemed a long time. Then it is your name," he said. "But maybe not all your name. I think you have another." So little Diamond grew up in the finest house in Glade, a fat, bright-eyed baby, a ruddy, cheerful boy. He had a sweet singing voice, a true ear, and a love of music, so that his mother, Tuly, called him Songsparrow and Skylark, among other loving names, for she never really did like "Diamond." He trilled and caroled about the house; he knew any tune as soon as he heard it, and invented tunes when he heard none. His mother had the wisewoman Tangle teach him The Creation of Ea and The Deed of the Young King, and at Sunreturn when he was eleven years old he sang the Winter Carol for the Lord of the Western Land, who was visiting his domain in the hills above Glade. The Lord and his Lady praised the boy's singing and gave him a tiny gold box with a diamond set in the lid, which seemed a kind and pretty gift to Diamond and his mother. But Golden was a bit impatient with the singing and the trinkets. "There are more important things for you to do, son," he said. "And greater prizes to be earned." At that Dulse looked him over again. No cloak, no staff. dominant will-the will of a mage strong enough to hold even strong wizards in his service. The.another witch-man in the door her baby would be born dead twice over. Her screaming could be heard.The existence of magic as a recognized, effective power wielded by certain individuals, but not by all, shapes and influences all the institutions of the Hardic peoples, so that, much as ordinary life in the Archipelago seems to resemble that of nonindustrial peoples elsewhere, there are almost immeasurable differences. One of these differences may be, or may be indicated by, the lack of any kind of institutionalised religion. Superstition is as common as it is anywhere, but there are no gods, no cults, no formal worship of any kind. Ritual occurs only in traditional offerings at the sites of the Old Powers, in the great, universally celebrated annual festivals such as Sunreturn and the Long Dance, in the speaking and singing of the traditional songs and epics at these festivals, and, perhaps, in the performance of spells of magic..Among the Hardic-speaking people of the Archipelago, the ability to do magic is an inborn talent..Archmage, here, in the Grove, as always.
